Hi:

Summer is here and with it the warm weather and long days. In Rhode Island it has mostly meant RAIN! To keep myself dry, I've been inside, busy with a series of interviews. Recently, I spoke with the folks at Photo District News about my work in India. Check out the results of one interview at: http://www.pdnonline.com/pdn/cp/olympus/feature/article_display.jsp?vnu_content_id=1003986913

Here is one of my favorite images that they featured in that article.

Similarly, Nazar - a website with a distinctly South Asian perspective has posted a portfolio of my India work: 'Concurrence: An Evolving India.' See that at <http://nazaronline.net/infocus/2009/06/concurrence-an-evolving-india/>

On the Wells Point site, I have recently been blogging about the demise of Kodachrome film, new resources for photographer, the most important piece of free imaging software and my thoughts on being a frequently flying photographer. I also posted two new pod casts titled: "Editing and critiquing photographs of India" along with "Working a situation when photographing."

I just posted the dates for a number of new workshops I will be teaching in the future. My upcoming class in Greece is one that I am especially looking forward to. The light, the food, the locations and the people should make it an exceptional experience. You can read about all my upcoming workshops at: <http://www.davidhwells.com/workshops/index.html>

I hope you can get out there and enjoy the long summer days and especially the extra light that the season bring with it. I hope you enjoyed my latest monthly newsletter. I welcome your feedback. Thanks,

David H. Wells
