January started and ended in India, where I enjoyed warm weather, great light, and good food. The first half of the month I spent with my family and in the second half I was leading a photography workshop with Open Sky Expeditions. During that South India workshop, I made five short films on different aspects of life in South India that we encountered during the workshop.

Each short film was captured, edited, and output only using my iPhone. I challenged myself to only use my smart phone camera for an entire workshop and to make short films with that one tool. I like to think that my plan worked, but you be the judge. To entice you into watching these films, images from each of the five films are interspersed throughout this newsletter. Click on a photo to jump to one of the different films.

Speaking of India, one of my India photos from 2018 was posted recently on the web by the printed magazine Aramco World. Another re-use of an old image took place in January when a photograph I made in 1988 was published, with my permission, to accompany an article on the career of California journalist, Jose Gaspar, who had a long career working in television and as a reporter for newspapers.

WORKSHOP NEWS:

Now that I have completed this year's version of the workshop in South India, the region that I call my second home, we have fixed dates for the 2025 workshop. If you like what you see on the short films noted above, I hope you will join us.

My next big adventure is March 24 to April 4 when I will be enjoying the magic of Sicily. As part of that workshop, we photograph the century's old Sicilian Easter rituals, enjoy amazing food and wine, as well as the wonderful Sicilian people. These trips are the perfect way to combine two of your shared passions - travel and photography. So think about joining me.

I hope you enjoyed my updates I welcome your feedback. If you know anyone interested in getting these updates, please encourage them to sign up for this newsletter.
