February was a month of recovery and catching up after six weeks in the warmth of South India. Yes, it was cold in Rhode Island, but it was not unbearable and so far it's been a winter with minimal snow.

In February, I finished the last of six short films that I made on different aspects of life in South India. Each of the films was captured only using my iPhone. I did the initial capture for all of them during my South India photography workshop with Open Sky Expeditions. I will be leading that same adventure/travel photography workshop in February of 2025. To entice you into watching the new film, images from that film are interspersed throughout this newsletter.

In other news, a story I photographed for the September/October 2013 edition of Saudi Aramco World on the Kutch region of India was recently posted in an online version with my cover photo. Check it out!

My next photo workshop will be in Sicily, Italy, photographing the warm people, enjoying the wonderful food, taking in the nice weather, and especially photographing the centuries old Easter processions. I plan to make more short films during my time there, and I look forward to sharing them here in the future.

NEWS YOU CAN USE:

Though I knew of the work of the photographer, Saul Leiter, I don't think I appreciated it fully until I read a blog piece titled: 10 Lessons We Can Learn from Street Photographer Saul Leiter While the photos seen in that blog are very interesting and compelling, the ten lessons he offers for all photographers are well worth the read.

WORKSHOP NEWS:

March 24 to April 4 is my next big adventure, when I will be enjoying the magic of Sicily. We will photograph the century's old Sicilian Easter rituals, enjoy amazing food and wine as well as the wonderful Sicilian people. All of my travel photography workshops/trips are the perfect way to combine two of our shared passions - travel and photography. So think about joining me.
